HEROISM ALONE DOESN'T QUALIFY A CANDIDATE

I'm a veteran who served my country in the Vietnam War in 1971. Then 28 years later, on Oct. 2, 1999, it was I am and I saw a flash of light in a corn field in San Martin, California. The light was from the dome light of a car, and I saw a person slide out of the front seat onto their back. I drove towards the light and I rescued a 15-year-old girl that had been kidnapped and raped by three rapists.

I got her in my van and as the vehicle was trying to flee, I sped toward the car and got the license number. They were caught, tried, convicted and sent to 77 years to life in prison.

The fact that I served this country and was involved in a rescue doesn't give me the ticket to run for Congress.

Alek Skarlatos is a veteran and was involved in a heroic incident in France — good for him. He needs to run for a lesser office and get some experience under his belt. Skarlatos has no experience except for placing third on Dancing With the Stars.

He once said, "I still love President Trump, and I think he did a great job!" May I remind Skarlatos about the Jan. 6 insurrection where D.C. cops were beaten with the American flag by so-called Trump patriots. And you still love Donald Trump, the Vietnam war draft dodger.

If you don't want to see Skarlatos dancing with Marjorie Taylor Greene on the Capitol Rotunda, please vote for Val Hoyle for Congress.

VOTE FOR EXPERIENCE – ELECT WILDE

I fully support Marty Wilde for the Lane County Circuit Court Position II. Unlike his opponent, Wilde has a significant amount of experience. He has been a judge advocate, United States Air Force, from 1998 to the present. He is an instructor of trial practice and family law for the Air Force Judge Advocate General School, and he is the Air National Guard Advisor for the Inspector General of the Air Force. His private practice includes mediation in criminal, family and military law.

He has almost four years as a representative in the Oregon House. During his time as representative, Wilde has consistently sent e-newsletters to keep his constituents informed. He has been very active in supporting the people in his district. He has a juris doctor degree from the University of Oregon School of Law.

I think that Wilde has the ability to step right into Position II in Lane County Circuit Court and the background to perform at a high level of competence.

the densely populated center of Eugene for the benefit of wealthy major league baseball owners raises many issues. About 1 percent of Lane County residents attend an Ems home game. They might try to ignore the obvious problems that would be created by squeezing a ballpark into the center of the city. People living within a few blocks of the fairgrounds are keenly aware of the problems because they experience traffic, parking and noise issues each year during the county fair.

The backers of the proposed ballpark talk as if it would have multiple uses benefiting everyone — but this is not true. Most of the time this formerly public space would be closed by a big fence locking out the public. Home games would bring a nightmare to local residents who must utilize street parking. I'm pretty sure no county commissioner living near the fairgrounds would vote to build a Triple-A baseball park there. It is a no-brainer that sites on the outskirts of the city where the land is cheaper would be preferable for professional baseball.

On another note, I know that political advertising is not known for its honesty, but Hoyle's opponent, Alek Skarlatos, has hit a new low with a TV ad implying that former President Barack Obama supports him. That might be the most extreme lie I've seen in an Oregon campaign.

Obama himself has objected to it, and pointed out how Skarlatos opposes all of Obama's major policies, like Obamacare and environmental protection. It gives me another reason to vote for Hoyle and not reward the dishonesty.

YES ON 20-333

As someone who drives a car, I support Eugene measure 20-333 because I know it takes ongoing maintenance to keep our roads in good repair. As a person who rides a bicycle and walks for many of my trips, I support the bond measure because it will also help make it easier and safer for me to get to my destinations while reducing traffic congestion for motorists.

As a taxpayer, I support the bond measure because it continues a successful program the voters have approved three times before without raising the tax rate. As someone who cares about good governance, I support the bond measure because it provides accountability through public engagement, an independent auditor, and a citizen oversight committee to make sure the money is spent the way it's intended.

And as someone who cares about future generations, I support the bond measure because it provides funding to plant trees to help keep our streets cool and beautiful.

Please join me in voting yes on measure 20-333.

LESLEY FOR COMMISSIONER

I strongly support Dawn Lesley as county commissioner for west Eugene. Why? The climate crisis. Lesley is passionate about implementing the strongest climate resilience plan for Lane County. It will be needed in the near future. Within 25 years, wildfire areas are projected to increase by over 400 percent, stream flows to diminish by over 40 percent, the Cascade snowpack to almost disappear and sea level to rise almost 2 feet. (These figures are from Lane County reports). Lesley understands this and will work hard to make sure Lane County remains livable for all inhabitants. Her candidate does not accept the need for emergency action.

Please vote for Lesley, contribute if you can (DawnLesley.org) and volunteer to get out the vote.

'Then They Came for Me'

THE FAMOUS QUOTATION CAME FROM A GERMAN PASTOR WHO —
UNTIL IT WAS TOO LATE — SUPPORTED THE NAZIS

First they came for the Communists, and I did not speak out — because I was not a communist.
Then they came for the trade unionists, and I did not speak out — because I was not a trade unionist.
Then they came for the Jews, and I did not speak out — because I was not a Jew.

Then they came for me — and there was no one left to speak for me.

The quote is well known, but how many know the story behind it? Martin Niemöller served his country as a U-boat captain during WWI and entered the ministry after the war. His autobiography, From U-Boat to Pulpit, became a best seller when published in 1933 and received positive reviews in Nazi papers.

A very patriotic German and a religious conservative, Niemöller initially supported Hitler. He believed Hitler would bring a revival to the country and trusted his assurances that he would honor the independence of the church and respect Christian values.

Like most German pastors of the time, Niemöller held anti-Semitic views. Nazi propaganda targeting Jews as the enemy of the Germany did not concern him. He drew the line, however, when it came to Christian converts of Jewish descent. For Niemöller, they were no different from any other member of the church. He therefore opposed the infamous "Aryan paragraph" that would deny Jews the rights of citizenship.

In 1933 Niemöller organized pastors to provide support to the members of their congregations targeted as Jewish. Then working with Swiss theologian Karl Barth, he helped form the Confessing Church movement that stood in opposition to Hitler's efforts to co-opt the German church into the Nazi program. Though the Confessing Church did not officially oppose Hitler, a few of its members were involved in resistance efforts, including Dietrich Bonhoeffer, the famed Christian martyr executed shortly before the end of the war.

Niemöller's sermons provide insight into the movement. His criticism of the Nazi regime is very scant at first and often in coded language. But as time went on and more of his colleagues were arrested, you can see his growing concern and anger. Never, however, does he express concern for Jewish citizens. He truly did not speak out.

Nevertheless, Niemöller's criticism of Hitler was too direct, and he was sent to the concentration camp outside of Berlin in 1937 where he remained until 1945. He escaped execution only because the SS lost control of the concentration camp in the final days of the war.

The experience in that camp was revelatory. For the first time Niemöller could identify with the persecution of Jews and others under Nazi rule. He recognized that his resistance through the church was not enough and that he, and other patriotic citizens like him, had made the rise of Hitler possible. Once freed, he began working for a national confession of guilt, known as the "Stuttgart Confession," issued by the German church in 1945. He became one of the most widely recognized leaders of the church and an outspoken peace activist.

What is it they say about those ignorant of history who are doomed to repeat it? Niemöller offers the history lesson that we ignore at our own peril. The greatest threat to democracy comes not from outside our borders, but from within. Niemöller was a good patriot who loved his country, and along with so many others like him, naïvely voted for the man who brought the Holocaust and destroyed much of Europe. When Niemöller realized his error, it was too late.

From the three years I lived in Germany, I learned that the German people are really not that different from us. And if someone like Hitler could take control of that country in the 1930s, it can also happen here today. Our only hope may be whether or not the Niemöllers of our generation will not be so deceived as he. Sadly, even after the Jan. 6 attack on democracy, too many seem all too willing to keep the blinders on. I fear for our future.

On June 27, 1937, Niemöller told his congregation after speaking of the many colleagues who had been arrested: "It is a case of deciding whether we shall believe or not believe, whether we shall stand or fall, whether we shall choose salvation or perdition, life or death, and this decision must be made not in the future, but here and now." They came for him four days later, and there was no one left to speak for him. ■

Labor Ready

AFTER YEARS AS A CIVIL RIGHTS LAWYER, CHRISTINA STEPHENSON WANTS TO BE BOLI COMMISSIONER

By Henry Houston

Oregonians spend most of their lives working, and many of them may not know the role that the state's Bureau of Labor & Industries has in supporting their labor rights.

Christina Stephenson is running against former state Rep. Cheri Helt of Bend to serve as BOLI's commissioner and head up an agency whose responsibilities include supporting apprenticeship programs, informing workers about their rights and investigating workplace violations.

Stephenson says that, if elected, she wants to continue the agency's work on investing in apprenticeship programs, which outgoing Commissioner Val Hoyle worked on during her term, and increase public awareness of the agency that can benefit workers and business owners. Hoyle is currently running for Congress.

Helt did not respond to Eugene Weekly's multiple requests for an interview.

Stephenson is a Portland-based civil rights lawyer. She received 47 percent of votes in the May primary election, short of the 50 percent required to avoid a runoff election, so she faces Helt, who received 19 percent of the vote.

BOLI enforces the labor laws passed by the Legislature, so it can't create or erase legal statutes, Stephenson says. She says that the businesses she's spoken with want the laws enforced to level the playing field. "They don't want to have to compete with a business down the street that is using wage theft as part of their business model," she says.

But the number of labor complaints is low compared to the number of businesses that operate in Oregon, Stephenson says. "It's really a small fraction," she adds. "If we can invest even more in technical assistance for businesses, I think we could even shrink that number of complaints by making sure we have a robust communication program."

A way to cut down on violations is to remind businesses about labor laws, Stephenson says, such as new regulations passed by the Legislature. She says she wants to direct the agency to analyze the data on common violations as a way to inform BOLI's outreach with business owners.

But Stephenson isn't focused only on BOLI's communication with businesses. She says she wants to work on increasing BOLI's partnerships so more Oregonians know about the agency and what it does. "Make sure that we have better partnerships with folks on the ground," she says. "Working with groups that have built trust in communities that may be reluctant to interface with government agencies."

As commissioner, Hoyle worked to increase apprenticeship at BOLI, and that's something that Stephenson says she wants to continue. She says that she wants to see that there are apprenticeship programs for wildland firefighters and health care workers. And she wants to advocate for BOLI personnel who can strengthen relationships with K-12 schools so 16- and 17-year-olds can enroll in pre-apprenticeship programs, preparing them for apprenticeships after high school.

Stephenson has raised $1.42 million in her campaign for BOLI commissioner. Her biggest cash supporters have been labor unions, including $200,000 from Local 48 Electricians Political Action Committee, $100,000 from Pacific Northwest Regional Council of Carpenters and $70,000 from Oregon Nurses PAC.

Helt has raised $517,000. Her largest support is $60,000 from Oregon Realtors PAC, $60,000 from the American General Contractors PAC (AGC) and $30,000 from Freres Lumber Company.

Stephenson has received more endorsements than Helt. Although Helt is supported by two of the three current gubernatorial candidates, unaffiliated Betsy Johnson and Republican Christine Drazan, Stephenson has been endorsed by the past five BOLI commissioners, as well as several legislators and labor organizations.

"People appreciate the fact that I've spent tens of thousands of hours with the law that's enforced by [BOLI], and that I have an articulated plan to invest in apprenticeship programs," Stephenson says. "Those issues — moving our economy forward, treating workers with dignity — they're nonpartisan." ■

• In another blow to local journalism, The Register-Guard announced Nov. 2 that it will no longer publish opinion pieces. Having already slashed political endorsements and most columns, the paper is now eliminating editorials, opinion columns and letters to the editor. In a column announcing the change, Editor Michelle Maxwell said editing such work is a "time-consuming responsibility that this newsroom's resources can no longer bear." Gannett Co., which publishes The RG, has been urging its more than 250 daily papers to cut back on letters, endorsements and other opinion pieces. Please don't stop subscribing — we need a local daily paper. And rest assured, dear readers: Your local and vocal Eugene Weekly is as opinionated as ever. We're going to keep laying out our opinions on matters of importance each week in Slant, and we're happy to keep reviewing, editing and publishing your Viewpoint columns on local issues. And do keep those opinionated letters to the editor coming!

• Eugene Weekly's beloved longtime Happening People photographer and writer Paul Neevel is having a retrospective show, entitled 60 Years, featuring images from Neevel's first year as a seri-

• As we go to press, Eugene police are investigating reports of pencil sharpener blades found in Halloween candy. Reports like these — or rumors of fentanyl laced candy — scare the crap out of parents. Is it true? We will be interested to see what the Eugene police dig up. According to Eugene Weekly's editor Camilla Mortensen, who just happens to have a degree in folklore, there is a phenomenon called "ostentation" in which rumors or legends are told about things like sharp blades in candy and the narrative is made real by someone who's heard the tale. Reality, hoax or ostentation, it's hard enough to raise kids without scares like this!

• Sunday was a big day for women's sports in America. The Portland Thorns National Women's Soccer League championship match was actually shown on prime time on CBS. Some of us sportball fans had to go back and forth to the World Series, but we watched the Thorns best Kansas City 2-0. Portland loves the Thorns, so they celebrated, forgetting for the moment the sexual abuse scandal that's been rocking the team.

• Back in 2007 the sentencing of largely local eco-saboteurs to federal prison for arson and other actions in the name of the environment gripped Eugene. Some of the Earth Liberation Front activists were even deemed "terrorists" by the feds. Years before that the arsons themselves — a ranger station, a wild horse corral, a slaughterhouse — also gripped Eugene and Oregon. Most of those convicted have served their time, but Joseph Dibee, who had been living overseas, was dramatically captured in Cuba in 2018 (see our story "Slow Burn" on EugeneWeekly.com). He was sentenced in court Nov. 1 to time served and may have to pay some of the $1.3 million in restitution.

• When we got our copy of the dark money funded attack ad against Val Hoyle we were so surprised by its weird content that we didn't notice at first it stole some of Eugene Weekly's Art Director Todd Cooper's own content — one of Cooper's photos. The ad, funded by "Green Oregon," attacks Hoyle in support of Green Party candidate Mike Beilstein, but was not endorsed by Beilstein, who says he doesn't do attack campaigns, nor by fellow progressive tree-hugger Doyle Canning, who ran against Hoyle in the primary. Because of federal elections' legal loopholes, we won't know who was behind the flyer until after the election, but Canning and Beilstein say it's clear Republicans are trying to discourage progressives from supporting Hoyle so the Republican MAGA candidate Alek Skarlatos can win the congressional seat.

How to Care

LANE COUNTY IS LAUNCHING A NEW PROGRAM TO AID VICTIMS OF TRAGEDY

By Ella Hutcherson

Last spring, the national Trauma Intervention Program (TIP) was greenlit for its 15th and newest affiliate providing emotional and practical support to victims of sudden tragedies.

That 15th is here in Lane County.

Dan Isaacson, who has been fighting for TIP's integration into Lane County since 2019, says he was almost brought to tears when it was given the go-ahead by the county's service agencies, because of the difference TIP will make in a moment of tragedy.

"I know that there's a door being knocked on, in that moment, and what's about to happen for some mother or father or brother or sister," he says. "And to know that those doors still are going to be knocked on, but they'll be knocked on in a way that provides care rather than trauma, is probably one of the best things that I've been part of."

TIP is a national volunteer-based nonprofit, founded in 1985, that trains volunteers who are then called by emergency personnel, such as police or paramedics, to assist those affected by a devastating incident such as a death. These volunteers are trained in emotional first aid, a series of practices designed to guide victims through the immediate aftermath of a tragedy and connect them to resources for next steps.

Now that TIP has been funded in Lane County, volunteers will be available locally 24/7, and Isaacson expects that they will begin responding to calls from the emergency system in March 2023.

TIP for Lane County, the name of the new affiliate, has an approximately $40,000 budget that comes from different service agencies in the county — Eugene Fire Department, Eugene Police Department, Springfield Police Department, and other service agencies both urban and rural.

"TIP is a time-tested, nationwide program that has worked in a lot of different communities. It's why we're unhesitant to devote EPD dollars toward what's really going to be a county-wide resource," says Doug Mozan, patrol captain for EPD. "I'm very hopeful that a lot of people become TIP volunteers and that we have a more resilient community as a result."

Bridget Byfield was a TIP volunteer 28 years ago. In 1998, she was sent from Multnomah County to Lane County following the Thurston High School shooting. And she moved to Lane County in 2006 while working in child welfare.

"I kept thinking, 'TIP is needed so badly here,'" she says.

Byfield has long advocated for TIP's introduction to Lane County, and says she never gave up hope. Retired from child welfare since 2020, she's been working on proposals and meeting with police, fire and mental health agencies to get them on board with the program.

Now, she's stepping into a new role, as program director of TIP for Lane County.

"Lane County is full of caring people. And sometimes we just don't know how or when to be there for each other," Byfield says. "TIP provides that information, and the opportunity to care for each other."

As program director, Byfield will be responsible for overseeing team leaders — those who delegate volunteers — providing updates to the county, briefing emergency personnel, running monthly meetings for volunteers and developing the resource guide, which guides TIP clients to appropriate mental health or practical resources after an incident.

"One of my pet peeves when I was in child welfare was to get resources that were no longer functioning," Byfield says. "You have people that have just been through something traumatic; it needs to be consistently updated, and we need to know the resources we give are viable and the best we have in the county."

Byfield is also currently setting up the training academy for TIP for Lane County volunteers. Trainers from TIP National will lead the academy, and it will begin in January 2023.

Isaacson says that TIP is a tried-and-true pathway to preventing unnecessary trauma for victims of tragedies, and that Lane County is overdue for such a resource.

"There are solutions here that other communities have found," he says. "And the dollar amount is so minuscule to the benefit the community gets."

For Byfield, TIP has been the most "heartwarming" volunteer experience she's ever had. During her time as a volunteer, she would give her clients space to talk about their loved ones, to revel in something beautiful even in their darkest moments. Their words have stuck with her for a lifetime.

"They would talk from the day they met, and the stories I would get were the warmest, deepest love in the world," Byfield says. "You don't get to witness that kind of love in the grocery store." ■

HAPPENING PEOPLE

BY PAUL NEEVEL

Jasmine Darmadi

"I was born and raised in Eugene," says Jasmine Darmadi, now a senior at South Eugene High School. "My mom immigrated from China and my dad from Indonesia. They met at the University of Oregon, where she studied business and he studied computer science." During three years of grade school at McCornack Elementary in west Eugene, where she was often the only person of color in the room, Darmadi felt the weight of microaggression, much of it unintended. "Then we moved to south Eugene when my dad got a job at the UO," she continues. "I noticed a cultural difference that includes academics and being treated differently." She completed grade school at Camas Ridge Elementary, then middle school at Roosevelt. "During the pandemic, it's been tough for many students," she reports, "to have motivation for homework after online classes from 8:30 am to 1 or 2 pm. You had to stay tuned in the whole time except for a 10-minute break here and there. I fell behind, but luckily I had my sister Megan, who is four years older, to help me out." She also started reading online news reports about how online schooling had negatively affected BIPOC and low-income students. "Now more than ever, these students need help," she emphasizes, "and they don't all have someone like my sister. It's easier to understand something when you're being helped by someone of a similar age group. That's what inspired me to start Hygge Tutoring." Hygge, pronounced hue-gah, is a Danish term that denotes a feeling of well-being. "The first thing I did was to contact the 4J school district's equity and inclusion team," she explains. "A member of the team, Alma Reyes Guillen, advertised on elementary and middle school websites to find students who could use free tutoring services." Darmadi herself was the very first tutor. The second was a girl from Los Angeles who started a Hygge Tutoring branch in that city, and the HT community has grown from there. "Last year, we had about 10 tutors in Eugene," she notes, "and 75 tutors in eight states around the country. For a while I was a tutor, but now I am an administrator. I've learned a lot about the components that create a successful organization."

BATTLEGROUND OREGON

WITH ELECTION DAY AROUND THE CORNER,
NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY FIGURES HAVE DESCENDED INTO OREGON

By Henry Houston

A 3,000-plus crowd of students and community members at the University of Oregon's Erb Memorial Union Amphitheater screams as Sen. Bernie Sanders walks on stage. He waves to the crowd as John Lennon's "Power to the People" plays in the background.

But Sanders isn't in Lane County for a presidential bid, like he was in 2016. This time, he's one of several high profile Democrats — including President Joe Biden — who have recently traveled to Oregon to stump for the tight gubernatorial and congressional races in the Nov. 8 midterm election.

Sanders is one of the most popular Democrats in the country with young voters and progressives. During his time in the Senate, as well as his bids for the Democratic presidential nomination in 2016 and 2020, he's called for creating universal health care, taxing the rich and investing in climate action. And he stopped in Oregon on an eight-state trip to rally young and progressive voters to support Democrats in the midterm elections.

Polls show that Republicans are likely to take the House of Representatives, and with three congressional seats in Oregon without an incumbent, leaders from both parties have appeared at rallies and events. Oregon could play a role in influencing which party is in control of the U.S. House. This state's tight gubernatorial race also means Oregon could see its first Republican governor in decades.

Democrats are vying to maintain majorities in Congress and the governor's office to address climate change, gun safety, corporate accountability and more. Democratic nominee for the 4th Congressional District Val Hoyle is trying to succeed Peter DeFazio, who's retiring after 18 terms in Congress, and she says that the two share similar values and policy interests.

Oregon Democrat Tina Kotek is running for governor, an office that Republicans may have in their grasp because of a three-way race that could split the Democratic Party vote.

Both candidates, facing tight races, have seen big household-name Democrats like Sanders as a way to generate enthusiasm, especially with the youth vote. "This election matters for their future, whether it's climate, choice or gun safety," Kotek tells Eugene Weekly. "These are really core issues for younger voters."

VAL'S VALUES

Before Sanders took the stage at the Oct. 27 rally, DeFazio told the crowd to just "vote, goddammit."

"Just one of you out there who forgets to drop your ballot, you might make the difference in that race," DeFazio said.

The first midterm after a change in the White House often results in the minority gaining at least one chamber of Congress; it's a pattern that has held true in the post-World War II era, except in a few instances, such as the midterms immediately after the Sept. 11 attacks.

One seat in Oregon that Democrats are working to hold on to is the one that DeFazio held for decades. It's a race where DeFazio is working with Hoyle to ensure his supporters back her while national Republicans back Alek Skarlatos.

Hoyle tells EW that she and DeFazio have similar political values, and that DeFazio has helped her as she campaigns against the opponent he defeated in 2020. "He has been incredible in helping me understand how to navigate federal versus state issues, and letting people in D.C. know that this is an important, key race and that I'm the right person," Hoyle says. "It's important for him to have somebody who's actually qualified."

Hoyle says she has many friends running for office throughout the country, and they don't have that support, which makes a difference in a campaign.

DeFazio's legislative priorities have focused on transportation and infrastructure — and he's ending his career as chairman of the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee. Hoyle says she'll focus on transportation and infrastructure if elected, especially advocating for the Coos Bay container shipping port, which will reduce the supply chain congestion on the West Coast by 10 to 12 percent.

Hoyle says she'll also push Congress to consider the windfall profits tax on fossil fuel companies. "Everyone is looking at gas prices," she says. "But what they're not noting is that every single one of these gas and oil companies has increased profits and uses profits to buy stocks back, as opposed to lowering prices at the pump."

Addressing gas prices by holding fossil fuel corporations accountable is something that won't happen under a Republican-majority government, Hoyle says. She says the Republican Party is planning to privatize Social Security and Medicare. And Sen. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina has already introduced a bill that would create a 15-week national abortion ban.

The pathway for the Democratic Party to maintain its majority in the House of Representatives is through Oregon, Hoyle says. Growing up in New Hampshire, where politicians flock in hopes of kickstarting presidential bids, she says she's used to living in a place that gets a lot of attention.

Polls suggest that two out of Oregon's six congressional races are tight — incumbent Reps. Earl Blumenauer, Suzanne Bonamici and Cliff Bentz seem sure to win their seats. According to nonpartisan think tank The Cook Political Report, only Hoyle's race leans Democratic and Andrea Salinas is slightly favored despite being a toss up.

But Republicans could grab the Congressional District 5 seat, which Jamie McLeod-Skinner unseated Democratic incumbent Rep. Kurt Schrader in the May primary. On Nov. 1, The Cook Political Report, changed its view on the race from toss-up to lean Republican. The race changed in favor of Lori Chavez-DeRemer because the think tank said national Republican ads purchased by Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy's Congressional Leadership Fund have made an impact.

According to data from the Federal Election Commission, Skarlatos has outraised Hoyle. He's brought in $4 million compared to Hoyle's $2.2 million. Skarlatos has received sizable contributions from national Republican organizations, such as about $28,000 from Take Back the House GOP PAC, $16,833 from the National Republican Congressional Committee and $10,000 from Congressional Leadership Fund.

Although Skarlatos is trying to paint himself as a moderate by running ads of him posing with President Barack Obama, Hoyle says that two years ago he was running as a MAGA Republican. "McCarthy isn't paying to buy a

'This is really a consequential election. That's the kind of response we need to see, and I think we'll have a lot of success in turning out younger voters because they know what's at stake — it's their future.' — TINA KOTEK moderate," she says. "Kevin McCarthy is paying to buy a lap dog, who's going to vote the party line."

About half of Hoyle's contributions come from political action committees, such as labor union organizations, and the most of the other half are individual contributions. She's received a $10,000 total contribution from PACs associated with Teamsters United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, as well as the Save Democracy PAC and DeFazio's political campaign. She's also received $10,000 from James Fuiten of Hillsboro, owner of Metro West Ambulance, who's also supported other Oregon Democratic candidates for Congress, including Schrader.

But Hoyle also received public support at the Oct. 27 rally from Sanders. The endorsement from Sanders, who's beloved by progressives for his push for "Medicare for All" and calls to hold corporations accountable, is a strong reminder about her values to progressive voters in the wake of the Green Oregon PAC's three mailers that it sent voters in the past few weeks, she says.

"He was coming down because he wanted to make it clear that there was just one person he supports," she adds.

NATIONAL POLITICIANS STUMPING IN OREGON'S GOVERNOR'S RACE

Sanders wasn't in Eugene just to support Hoyle. He rallied for Kotek, who's in the toss up gubernatorial race for governor in Eugene, as well as in Portland later in the day.

Of the 36 U.S. gubernatorial races, Oregon's is remarkable because of unaffiliated candidate Betsy Johnson, who could split the Democratic Party vote, leading to a governor winning the race with less than 40 percent of the vote. With such a tight race, it's not just raining money — national political figures are pouring in to support the two major party candidates.

"They understand what's at stake," Kotek says of national Democrats traveling to Oregon. "They also understand that my values are in line with where Oregonians are, and they are more than happy to come and make sure people know what's at stake in the election."

The Democratic Governors Association, which has contributed $6.6 million to Kotek's campaign, helps bring in national political leaders to stump for the congressional and gubernatorial races, Kotek tells EW. Oregon campaigns have had several big names show up, including Sen. Elizabeth Warren, President Biden, Speaker Nancy Pelosi and Sanders. Those appearances, Kotek says, have generated a lot of enthusiasm.

And former President Barack Obama has hit the virtual campaign for Democrats throughout the U.S. He sent 30-second video endorsements to candidates in several close races, including Kotek, who says that she's thrilled to have his endorsement. "He's delivering the right message," she says. "I'm a fixer — let's get it done."

Kotek's campaign has been pushing the endorsement video as an advertisement on Facebook and Instagram. According to the Meta Ad Library, which publishes data on its ads, older users engage with ads, but the Obama video has mostly been seen by voters ages 18 to 35.

Democrats aren't the only ones sending in support. Drazan has received $7 million from the Republican Governors Association. And she's had big-name Republicans campaigning alongside her, including former New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie and RNC co-chair Tommy Hicks, who said on Twitter they were going door-to-door with her.

Drazan also had Virginia Gov. Glenn Youngkin speak at an Oct. 19 rally. Youngkin, Virginia's first Republican elected to a statewide office since 2009, told Drazan's supporters that 2022 is their "moment to take back your state, take back your schools, take back your law enforcement and make a statement that just like in Virginia will be heard around the world," according to reporting by the Oregon Capital Chronicle.

Kotek says that the Republican support for Drazan comes from political figures who don't share similar values with Oregonians, citing Christie's affiliation with the SBA Pro-Life advocacy group and Youngkin's advocacy for right-wing policy, such as targeting so-called critical race theory in K-12 education.

After the U.S. Supreme Court's Dobbs ruling, which overturned access to abortion as a constitutional right, Kotek says that who's in charge of the Legislature and governor's office is now more important with reproductive rights. "I'm a pro-choice champion. I believe in access to health care," she says, adding that Drazan would take the state backward on abortion access.

And Drazan's plans on addressing homelessness are weak, which speaks to how unprepared she is to serve as governor, Kotek says. "This isn't a solely public safety issue," she adds. "This is a mental health issue. This is making sure you're providing services. This is about building housing. You got to do the whole thing."

THE YOUNG VOTE

During Sanders' Eugene visit, he — and the other speakers — hammered the message of young people voting. Wyden said voters older than 65 have a 20 percent higher voting turnout than those 18 to 35 years old, and Sanders accentuated the importance of young people voting.

Before the Sanders events, Kotek says young voters in their late teens, 20s and 30s were already enthusiastic, but his appearance magnified it. She recalls talking to a voter whose young niece is enthusiastic about voting in her first election despite not being a politically engaged person. "This is really a consequential election," Kotek says. "That's the kind of response we need to see, and I think we'll have a lot of success in turning out younger voters because they know what's at stake — it's their future."

Young voters, ages 18 through 29, have long underperformed in participation, but recent polls show that they're voting in larger numbers. According to an April 2022 national poll released by the Institute of Politics at Harvard Kennedy School, 36 percent of young voters said they would vote, 55 percent of which would vote for Democrats. The results suggest a similar turnout to the 2018 midterm elections.

At the Oct. 27 rally, Sanders was blunt about the importance of the 2022 midterms. He said the future of the country — and people's lives — depend on Democrats maintaining control of Congress and the Oregon governor's office.

"If we do not get our act together and have the guts to take on the greed of the fossil fuel industry, the planet my generation is leaving to you and your kids will be increasingly uninhabitable and unhealthy," Sanders said. "And that is not acceptable." ■

THE LARGELY COLLEGE STUDENT CROWD CHEERS AS SEN. BERNIE SANDERS SPEAKS

In an essay for the Los Angeles Times in September, Silvia Moreno-Garcia cheerfully explored the perils of her work as a novelist, starting with her name. “Once someone told me if I wanted to make it as a writer I needed a shorter name,” she wrote. Then there is the body of her work, which includes sword-and-sorcery novellas, a coming-of-age noir set in northern Mexico and a horror novel. Is Moreno-Garcia a fantasy, historical or crime author? “As you can see, I give people headaches.” The award-winning Moreno-Garcia – born and raised in northern Mexico to parents who were “hoarders in many ways, avid readers who didn’t care what shelf something sat on” – comes to Eugene in support of her latest work, The Daughter of Doctor Moreau, which is set in 19th-century Yucatán. In 2020, Moreno-Garcia came into national prominence with Mexican Gothic, which made the bestseller list of The New York Times. She followed that up in 2021 with the novel Velvet Was the Night, a gritty look at Mexico’s Dirty War set in 1971. Moreno-Garcia lives in Vancouver, British Columbia. She is the publisher for Innsmouth Free Press and sometimes book columnist for The Washington Post.

Silvia Moreno-Garcia, author and editor, speaks and will sign books 2 pm Sunday, Nov. 6, at the Eugene Public Library in support of Lane Art Council’s Fiesta Cultural. The event is FREE. — Dan Buckwalter

PARK AND STATUE IN WALDPORT WILL HONOR BLACK MUSICIAN AND CIVIC LEADER WHO WAS BROUGHT TO OREGON AS A SLAVE

By Susan Palmer

It's only a matter of time until someone makes a movie about Louis Southworth's remarkable life.

An Oregon pioneer, a professional fiddle player, a blacksmith, a soldier, a horse trainer, a landowner who donated property for a school: That's Louis Southworth. And, oh yes, born a slave in Tennessee, a man who purchased his freedom and lived his adult life in Oregon during a period when the state's exclusion laws prohibited Black people from residing here.

"His story is intriguing; it reads like a novel," says Peter Helzer, a pre-eminent Oregon sculptor commissioned to create a bronze of Southworth that will grace a new park in Waldport that will be named for him.

A year and a half ago, the Waldport City Council agreed to honor Southworth, thanks to a suggestion by Jesse Dolin, destination developer for the Oregon Coast Visitors Association. Dolin grew up in the area and knew the history. Southworth, who homesteaded near Alsea Bay, was well known in the community, not least because he donated land for the construction of the first school in the area and later served as the school board president. Southworth Creek (originally named Darkey Creek before being renamed by the Oregon Geographic Names Board in 2000) empties into Alsea River a few miles upstream of Waldport.

Dolin says that his recommendation to honor Southworth has been embraced by everyone involved, the city council, looking to name the park, the visitors' association, who ponied up the money for the statue, and Helzer, who agreed to create it at cost.

The new park is at the site of the former middle/high school, empty since the school was moved in 2013 out of the tsunami zone. Helzer's sculpture will greet people at the park entrance. While work continues on the park, Helzer's sculpture will be unveiled at the Alsea Bay Bridge Visitor Center & Museum in Waldport on Saturday, Nov. 19.

Helzer's work dots the Oregon landscape with pieces in nearly every major community. In Eugene his work is nestled into local consciousness: author Ken Kesey, activist Rosa Parks, educator Brother Dan Grogan, the iconic Sighting Pedestal on Mount Pisgah. Helzer's more whimsical side emerges in other pieces: the otters in a Corvallis park, the turtles at the Oregon Zoo, the alligators on parade in Salem. He brings a storyteller's insight to bear in his sculptures, which offer both a narrative and an invitation to touch, to sit next to, to laugh out loud with.

Helzer, who has his own foundry on a bucolic piece of property in Dexter, brings decades of experience to both representational and abstract art. At this point in his career he can afford to be choosy. But he was drawn to Southworth for personal reasons.

A lifelong Oregonian, Helzer comes from pioneer stock, with family who came to Eugene in 1847 by wagon train then settled a year later south of what is now Philomath. His ancestors didn't live that far from Alsea Bay, where Southworth once lived.

Because he was a key part of the communities where he lived and worked, Southworth was often mentioned in the newspapers of his day. The notices might be brief — Louis Southworth visiting Corvallis, or being called for jury duty, or one of his horses taking a prize at the county fair. Or they might be lengthier: a call for community financial support when his failing health put him at risk of losing his home. At a time when few Black people resided in Oregon, people noticed Southworth, not only because of his race but because he brought so much else to the community.

"They would have known Louis Southworth, or known of him," Helzer says of his own ancestors.

Helzer, it turns out, is also a musician, his preferred instrument the five-string banjo. He suspects that his musical tastes likely coincide with Southworth's. "I've played a lot of tunes that he probably played," Helzer says.

Southworth's story is detailed in an excellent and deeply researched essay by genealogist and librarian Peggy Baldwin and published by the Oregon Historical Society on its Oregon Encyclopedia website.

He was born in Tennessee on July 4, 1829, according to census records, or 1830 according to his gravestone.

Some sources spell his name Louis; others, Lewis.

He arrived in Oregon in 1853 at the age of 24, brought here with his mother by their enslaver, James Southworth. When and how he took up the fiddle isn't clear, but by 1854, he was traveling in the southern Oregon and California gold fields, where he was able to earn money playing music.

In his travels he got caught up in the Rogue Valley Indian War, where white soldiers he encountered demanded he give up his rifle. Baldwin quotes Southworth on his decision not to surrender his weapon: "Feeling as if I could not part with my gun, which was the only means of defense I had, I joined the company." Col. John Kelsay's Second Regiment fought in two skirmishes in March and April of 1856. Southworth was wounded in one of those battles, Baldwin notes.

By 1859, his fiddle-playing — at dance schools, at community events — had earned him $1,000, enough to buy his freedom. In today's dollars, that would be about $35,000. It was an extraordinary sum to amass and surrender so that he could pursue the "unalienable rights" outlined in the nation's Declaration of Independence.

While Oregon had exclusion laws at the time, it wasn't a slave state, and Helzer notes that there wasn't the infrastructure to enforce laws making it illegal for African Americans to live here. Southworth eventually settled in Buena Vista, at the time a bustling community on the Willamette River a little northeast of Corvallis. There he worked as a blacksmith and ran a livery stable, according to Baldwin. And that's also where he met and married Mary Cooper, whose adopted son Alvin McCleary, he helped raise. The principal at McCleary's school helped Southworth learn to read and write.

In 1880, the family moved west, staking claim to land on a creek feeding into the Alsea River a few miles east of Waldport. Besides clearing and working his land, Southworth also ferried passengers and cargo up and down the river and across the bay.

A portrait of Southworth graces the cover of A Peculiar Paradise, A History of Blacks in Oregon, 1788-1940 by Elizabeth McLagan. She notes Southworth's commitment to voting and describes a storm on Election Day one year that kept everyone on the far side of Alsea Bay from crossing to vote in Waldport. Everyone, that is, except Southworth, who rigged oil cans to his boat to help keep it afloat. He was the only one from his side of the bay who cast a vote that day.

In 1883 Southworth donated half an acre of land on Alsea Bay for the construction of the area's first school. Later, he served on the school board.

His wife died in 1901, and in 1910 he sold his land, moved to Corvallis and bought a house. He married again in 1913, but his health had begun to fail. By 1915, he was struggling financially, and the community rallied, collecting enough money to pay off his mortgage and petitioning the government for a soldier's pension for him. He died in 1917 before that effort had made its way through the bureaucracy.

Between the lines of Southworth's life story, Helzer sees a man who was able to build trust and community wherever he went.

Helzer faced unique challenges in designing and building the Southworth piece. Unlike his other works, where familiarity, or a model, or plenty of still and video images existed, there were just three photographs of Southworth. Besides turning a flat rendering into an accurate three-dimensional one, Helzer wanted to capture the essence of Southworth's dignity.

"I thought, 'If it doesn't come out that way, I'll redo it,'" he says. Bronze art includes many intricate steps. First Helzer sculpts a clay version, then builds molds around the clay. These molds are used to transfer the form into wax. Another mold is built around the wax, which is melted away. Into that empty space, liquid bronze — a copper and tin alloy — is poured. Helzer is one of the few sculptors with his own foundry. He doesn't contract out any part of the process.

A do-over if he didn't like the results would be no small thing.

And then there was the music.

Because playing the fiddle was such a key part of Southworth's life, Helzer wanted to portray him playing the fiddle. And that added another layer of complexity, the unique positioning of fingers, hand, wrist and arm.

"The hard part is to get the gesture right," he says.

About that music: Baldwin's essay includes a story of the local Baptist congregation asking Southworth to give up his fiddle if he wanted to keep coming to church. In his own wry way, Southworth declined: "I told them to keep me in the church with my fiddle if they could, but to turn me out if they must; for I could not think of parting with the fiddle. I reckon my name isn't written in their books here any more; but I somehow hope it's written in the big book up yonder, where they aren't so particular about fiddles."

The epitaph on his gravestone in Corvallis: "A bit of heaven's music here below." ■

TWINS PETER AND WILL ANDERSON — ALONG WITH VOCALIST SIRI VIK — BRING GERSHWIN TO THE SHEDD

By David Ainsworth

George Gershwin has been a major inspiration to multi-instrumentalists and identical twins Peter and Will Anderson. "Gershwin was one of these gems in American culture where he just didn't have any boundaries," Will Anderson says.

The Anderson brothers and their band bring an evening of Gershwin to Eugene at 7:30 pm Friday, Nov. 11, at The Shedd.

Gershwin indeed went beyond boundaries. Throughout his short but productive career as a composer, he wrote music in both the classical and jazz genres, including Rhapsody in Blue and "I Got Rhythm." If you turn on a classical or jazz radio station and listen to it long enough, there's a good chance you'll hear at least one of Gershwin's compositions.

The duo will play at least five instruments between them, including flute; clarinet; and alto, tenor and soprano saxophone. The rest of their sextet consists of Siri Vik (vocals), Randy Porter (piano), Garrett Baxter (bass), and Ken Mastrogiovanni (drums), who are all based in the Eugene and Portland areas.

Raised in the Washington, D.C., area, the Anderson brothers eventually moved to New York City to attend Juilliard.

"That opened a lot of doors for us," Will Anderson says. "We got to play with, quite frankly, like kind of everyone that we had dreamed of playing with." These musicians include Jimmy Heath, Frank Wess and Wynton Marsalis. The brothers entered Juilliard in 2005, got their bachelor's and master's degrees and graduated in 2011.

Both brothers first started on clarinet, and were influenced by several jazz clarinet greats, including Benny Goodman and Artie Shaw.

"Growing up in the D.C. area, we were also very active in performing classical music," Will Anderson says. "The University of Maryland was a great resource for us, and we had several teachers there where we played Mozart and Brahms and other pieces."

Despite their early classical music influences, the Anderson brothers today mostly focus on jazz. However, their concert at The Shedd will bring back some of those classical influences with the Gershwin tunes. This is because of Gershwin's versatility with both genres.

"Speaking of incorporating classical elements into jazz, he's the best example," Will Anderson says. Prominent compositions include Rhapsody in Blue and the opera Porgy and Bess, in which one of its songs, "Summertime," has become a jazz standard.

Anderson explains that Gershwin studied classical music in Paris, and then traveled to the American South to learn about African American music tradition.

"He incorporated that into Porgy and Bess," Anderson says. "He's extremely well-rounded." This variety, Anderson says, is the main reason why he and his brother admire him.

Gershwin's songs are important for jazz students to learn. One of these is "I Got Rhythm."

"It's something that's memorized in practice for hours, by everyone from Kenny G to Branford Marsalis," says Peter Anderson. "You can't avoid learning his music if you're going to play jazz."

The brothers say they are excited to be performing in Eugene.

"The people in Oregon are great," Will Anderson says. "It's got a lot of free thinkers, and Oregon's a place where people really care about the arts."

The Anderson brothers will play about 14 tunes in the concert. But, as Will Anderson explains, they could easily do much more since Gershwin's repertoire is so vast.

"I mentioned Rhapsody in Blue, 'Summertime,' 'Embraceable You,' 'S Wonderful' — there's just so many," he says. "So, we're going to try to play as many as we can."

The Andersons perform 7:30 pm Friday, Nov. 11, at The Shedd. Tickets are $19 to $32 at TheShedd.com. See more on Peter and Will Anderson at PeterandWillAnderson.com.

GERTSON, deceased; Unknown Heirs and Devisees of DEE BARRETT "DANNY" MOYES, deceased; CONSTANCE JANE ZIVANICH MOYES; RICHARD DANIEL MOYES; and Also All Other Persons or Parties Unknown Claiming Any Right, Title, Lien, or Interest in the Property Described in the Complaint Herein, Defendants. Case No. 22CV029581 SUMMONS TO DEFENDANTS: Unknown Heirs and Devisees of JOHN A. GERTSON, deceased; and Also All Other Persons or Parties Unknown Claiming Any Right, Title, Lien, or Interest in the Property Described in the Complaint Herein. IN THE NAME OF THE STATE OF OREGON: You are hereby required to appear and defend the Complaint filed against you in the above case within thirty days after the first date of publication of this summons, and if you fail to appear and defend, the Plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief demanded in the Complaint. The object of the Complaint and the demand for relief are: Plaintiff claims a right to ownership through adverse possession of the real property in Lane County, State of Oregon, located at 53 North Adams Street, Eugene, Lane County, Oregon 97402 (the "Property") and more particularly described as follows: "Lot 7 in Block 8 of Riverwood, as platted and recorded at page 21 of volume 9, Lane County Oregon Plat Records, in Lane County, Oregon." Plaintiff's demand for relief is for a judgment as follows: (a) Declaring Plaintiff to be owner and entitled to possession of the Property free of any claim, estate, title, or interest of Defendants or those claiming under Defendants, and quieting title in the property in Plaintiff; (b) Enjoining Defendants and those claiming under Defendants from asserting any estate, title, or interest in the Property or any part thereof; (c) Awarding Plaintiff recovery of the costs and disbursements incurred by Plaintiff herein; and (d) Granting such other relief as this court may deem just and proper. NOTICE TO DEFENDANTS: READ THESE CAREFULLY! You must "appear" in this case or the other side will win automatically. To "appear" you must file with the court a legal document called a "motion" or "answer." The "motion" or "answer" must be given to the court clerk or administrator within 30 days along with the required filing fee. It must be in proper form and have proof of service on the plaintiff's attorney or, if the plaintiff does not have an attorney, proof of service on the plaintiff. The motion or answer or reply must be given to the court clerk or administrator within 30 days of the date of first publication specified herein along with the required filing fee. FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

BY ROB BREZSNEY

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19): In the coming weeks, I encourage you to work as hard as you have ever worked. Work smart, too. Work with flair and aplomb and relish. You now have a surprisingly fertile opportunity to reinvent how you do your work and how you feel about your work. To take maximum advantage of this potential breakthrough, you should inspire yourself to give more of your heart and soul to your work than you have previously imagined possible. (PS: By "work," I mean your job and any crucial activity that is both challenging and rewarding.)

Taurus (APRIL 20-MAY 20): Here's my weird suggestion, Taurus. Just for now, only for a week or two, experiment with dreaming about what you want but can't have. And just for now, only for a week or two, go in pursuit of what you want but can't have. I predict that these exercises in quixotic futility will generate an unexpected benefit. They will motivate you to dream true and strong and deep about what you do want and can have. They will intensify and focus you to pursue what you do want and can have.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20): Your most successful times in life usually come when all your various selves are involved. During these interludes, none of them is neglected or shunted to the outskirts. In my astrological opinion, you will be wise to ensure this scenario is in full play during the coming weeks. In fact, I recommend you throw a big Unity Party and invite all your various sub-personalities to come as they are. Have outrageous fun acting out the festivities. Set out a placemat and nametag on a table for each participant. Move around from seat to seat and speak from the heart on behalf of each one. Later, discuss a project you could all participate in creating.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22): A Cancerian reader named Joost Joring explained to me how he cultivates the art of being the best Cancerian he can be. He said, "I shape my psyche into a fortress, and I make people feel privileged when they are allowed inside. If I must sometimes instruct my allies to stay outside for a while, to camp out by the drawbridge as I work out my problems, I make sure they know they can still love me — and that I still love them." I appreciate Joost's perspective. As a Cancerian myself, I can attest to its value. But I will also note that in the coming weeks, you will reap some nice benefits from having less of a fortress mentality. In my astrological opinion, it's PARTY TIME!

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22): Leo poet Antonio Machado wrote, "I thought my fire was out, and I stirred the ashes. I burnt my fingers." I'm telling you this so you won't make the same mistake, Leo. Your energy may be a bit less radiant and fervent than usual right now, but that's only because you're in a recharging phase. Your deep reserves of fertility and power are regenerating. That's a good thing! Don't make the error of thinking it's a sign of reduced vitality. Don't overreact with a flurry of worry.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22): Virgo author Siegfried Sassoon became renowned for the poetry he wrote about being a soldier in World War I. Having witnessed carnage firsthand, he became adept at focusing on what was truly important. "As long as I can go on living a rich inner life," he wrote, "I have no cause for complaint, and I welcome anything which helps me to simplify my life, which seems to be more and more a process of eliminating inessentials!" I suggest we make Sassoon your inspirational role model for the next three weeks. What inessentials can you eliminate? What could you do to enhance your appreciation for all the everyday miracles that life offers you?

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22): You Libras have a talent that I consider a superpower: You can remove yourself from the heart of the chaos and deliver astute insights about how to tame the chaos. I like that about you. I have personally benefited from it on numerous occasions. But for the next few weeks, I will ask you to try something different. I'll encourage you to put an emphasis on practical action, however imperfect it might be, more than on in-depth analysis. This moment in the history of your universe requires a commitment to getting things done, even if they're untidy and incomplete. Here's your motto: "I improvise compromises in the midst of the interesting mess."

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21): "Fear is the raw material from which courage is manufactured," said author Martha Beck. "Without it, we wouldn't even know what it means to be brave." I love that quote — and I especially love it as a guiding meditation for you Scorpions right now. We usually think of fear as an unambiguously bad thing, a drain of our precious life force. But I suspect that for you, it will turn out to be useful in the coming days. You're going to find a way to transmute fear into boldness, bravery and even badassery.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21): For decades, the Canadian city of Sudbury hosted a robust mining industry. Deposits of nickel sulfide ore spawned a booming business. But these riches also brought terrible pollution. Sudbury's native vegetation was devastated. The land was stained with foul air produced by the smelting process. An effort to re-green the area began in the 1970s. Today, the air is among the cleanest in the province of Ontario. In the spirit of this transformation, I invite you to embark on a personal reclamation project. Now is a favorable time to detoxify and purify any parts of your life that have been spoiled or sullied.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 19): The literal meaning of the ancient Greek word aigilips is "devoid of goats." It refers to a place on the earth that is so high and steep that not even sure-footed goats can climb it. There aren't many of those places. Similarly, there are very few metaphorical peaks that a determined Capricorn can't reach. One of your specialties is the power to master seemingly improbable and impassable heights. But here's an unexpected twist in your destiny: In the coming months, your forte will be a talent for going very far down and in. Your agility at ascending, for a change, will be useful in descending — for exploring the depths. Now is a good time to get started!

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20-FEB. 18): Evolved Aquarians are often blessed with unprecedented friendships and free-spirited intimacy and innovative alliances. People who align themselves with you may enjoy experimental collaborations they never imagined before engaging with you. They might be surprised at the creative potentials unleashed in them because of their synergy with you. In the coming weeks and months, you will have even more power than usual to generate such liaisons and connections. You might want to make a copy of this horoscope and use it as your calling card or business card.

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 20): I surveyed the history of literature to identify authors I consider highly intuitive. Piscean-born Anais Nin was my top choice. She used language with fluidity and lyricism. She lived a colorful, unpredictable life. No one better deserves the title of Intuition Champion. And yet she also had a discerning view of this faculty. She wrote, "I began to understand that there were times when I must question my intuition and separate it from my anxieties or fears. I must think, observe, question, seek facts and not trust blindly to my intuition." I admire her caution. And I suspect it was one reason her intuition was so potent. Your assignment, Pisces, is to apply her approach to your relationship with your intuition. The coming months will be a time when you can supercharge this key aspect of your intelligence and make it work for you better than it ever has before.

Homework: Imagine you have taken a particular consciousness-altering drug. Imagine how it affects you. Newsletter:FreeWillAstrology.com.

I'm a woman in a hetero marriage. We've happily played with others a bit but not recently because we have a small child. We are both bi and in our 40s. We talked about getting the monkeypox vaccine, but I didn't think it was urgent because we're not currently having sex with anyone else. Here's my question: What should I do after learning that my husband got the monkeypox vaccine without telling me? I noticed a red bump on his arm, and he said it was nothing. After I said it looked like the monkeypox vax reaction, he admitted he got the vaccine but didn't tell me. I was in favor of him getting the vaccine, so I'm totally panicking because he sneaked to get the shot. I think he's cheating. It's 2 AM where I am, and I just ordered two at-home HIV/AIDS tests and I'm getting a full STI panel at my OB GYN on Monday. What should I do? I'm a wreck.

Seriously Panicking Over Unapproved Shot And Lies

By the time you read this, SPOUSAL, those at-home HIV/AIDS tests will have arrived, and you will have your results. You'll also have seen your OB GYN and most likely gotten the results of your STI tests. Assuming there were no unpleasant surprises — assuming you're still negative for all the same things you were negative for the last time you tested — what does that mean?

While I don't wanna cause you another sleepless night, SPOUSAL, your test results will all be negative and your husband could still be cheating on you. But in the absence of other evidence — in the absence of any actual evidence that your husband has cheated on you — I think your husband deserves the benefit of the doubt.

Getting the monkeypox vaccine is the only fact in evidence here, SPOUSAL, and it's a huge leap from, "My husband got the monkeypox vaccine without telling me," and, "My husband has been cheating on me with other men during a public health crisis that has primarily impacted gay and bi men and wasn't using condoms with those other men and knowingly put me at risk of contracting monkeypox and HIV." If your husband has a history of being reckless about his own sexual health and yours — if he tried to go bare without your consent when you played with other people, for example, and that incident and others like it fueled your freakout — I don't understand why you're still married to this man.

Zooming out for a second...

I can think of a few very good reasons why a married bi guy might decide to get the monkeypox vaccine even if his partner wanted him to wait. First, those shots haven't been easy to get. If the vaccine became available where you live and/or his doctor offered it to him, it was a good idea for him to get his shots even if he's not currently sleeping with anyone else. And why would his partner — why would you — want him to wait? If you didn't want him to get those shots as some sort of insurance policy, e.g., if you wanted cheating to be needlessly and avoidably risky as some sort of deterrent, that seems pretty reckless.

Sometimes, SPOUSAL, the likely excuse is the honest answer. I'm guessing your husband got his shots because he hopes you — the both of you — can start playing with others again in the near future and he wants to be ready. Guys have to wait a month after getting their first shot before getting their second shot, and another two weeks after that before they're fully immune. (Or as immune as they're going to get.) If your husband has been looking forward to opening your relationship back up — by mutual consent — sometime in the near future, he most likely wanted to be ready to go when you decided, together, to resume playing with others. And he didn't tell you he was getting the shots because, although he wanted to be ready to go when the time came, he knew you weren't ready and didn't want you to feel rushed or pressured.

My analysis of the situation presumes your husband isn't a lying, cheating, inconsiderate, reckless asshole and deserves the benefit of the doubt here. You know your husband better than I do, SPOUSAL, and it's entirely possible that your husband has proven himself to be a liar and a cheat and an inconsiderate asshole and a reckless idiot again and again and again.

But if that's the case — if he's all of those horrible, no-good, disqualifying things and, therefore, not deserving of the benefit of the doubt here — I would ask you again (and again and again): Why are you still married to him then?
